Quintiles Advisory Services, a healthcare research firm, is currently conducting a study about living with hereditary thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura (hTTP). This research may help improve how the patient's experience is accounted for in clinical trials for new treatments, and may also lead to interventions designed to better support patients and their families going through the treatment experience.

Patients 12 years of age and older with hTTP who meet our eligibility criteria will be invited to participate in a one-hour telephone discussion with one of Quintiles' healthcare researchers. The patient does not need to do anything to prepare, other than be ready to describe his/her experience of living with hTTP. At no point before, during, or after the interview will the patient be contacted to purchase anything or be asked to take any medication.

Participants will be compensated with a check for $100 for their time and effort, and may be contacted after the conclusion of the research to participate in an additional follow-up conversation (and will be compensated for their time as well should they choose to participate).

If you or your child are interested in participating, please contact Kayla Wodzicki, Quintiles Advisory Services, at 1-844-836-4102, 9:00 AM – 5:00 PM EST.
